ZCubes: Web technology of the future

HOUSTON

IIT Alumni of Greater Houston (IITAGH) kicked off their 2007 lecture series with a talk on ZCubes by Joseph Pally on Feb 22. Pally is a 1988 graduate from IIT Madras. He unveiled the next generation of web application called ZCubes. Joseph Pally and Parag Mathur demonstrated the wonderful capabilities of ZCubes web application to an audience of over 60 people at Madras Pavilion in Sugar Land.

Joseph Pally, along with Parag Mathur, demonstrated the wonderful capabilities of ZCubes web application

Today's generation is appropriately called the multitasking generation, Pally said. "How wonderful would it be if the web could be as creative as the human mind; with an application that lets you mix and match the best of the web to suit your needs."

ZCubes allows you to create professional web pages like photo albums by simply dragging and dropping images from Google and Flickr or uploading your photos and enhancing them with special effects. Place them anywhere, rotate them, add captions.

Drag and drop multiple videos from YouTube and view them simultaneously on a single screen while shopping online. E-cards can be jazzed up by creating them in your own style in the Zgreetings mode by choosing from a gallery of backgrounds, adding animations and clip art with a single click and adding fancy clipart or by drawing something online with the ZPaint functionality. The handwrite tool has built-in smoothing to automatically smooth out uneven text to match your natural handwriting in any language of choice.

ZCubes also makes it really easy to share your creation with friends and dear ones. You can choose from several options like save to local disk, email or publish your creation online with appropriate tag names and appropriate security settings.

Users can play multiple games while watching multiple videos in addition to browsing through today's top stories and chatting with friends all in one space- the Zspace, just as our "generation M" does. The best part is that the user can start creating fabulous web pages without any coding, programming, or any downloads for free! We encourage you to find out more on the ZCubes platform at www.ZCubes.com.

IITAGH activities include talks, networking and social events, mentoring of college graduates from surrounding universities and teaching Math at the Lee High School. There are over 1000 IIT alumni in the greater Houston area and the number is growing. The IITAGH is a non-exclusive organization that is open to all.
